CA176E OF THE HIGH HATES OP EXCHANGE. The object of the appointment of the Committee being the attainment of some efficient remedy for the unusual high rates of exchange between Dublin and London, the investigation of the cause of them has necessarily occupied a considerable portion of their attention. The persons examined are all perfectly conversant in the practice of exchange dealings, and have acquired very great estimation for their knowledge as experienced and enlightened merchants. The questions which were proposed carry with them evident marks of great knowledge in commercial polity, and of the impartial and unbiassed manner in which the proceedings of the Committee were conducted. It remains to examine how far the answers which were made contribute to unfold the true cause of the high rates of exchange. Hie opinions, contained in the evidence, may be ranged under two heads....
