Excerpt: .combined with a complete system of phonetics., If The child who uses these books starts with a big advantage, for the Mother Goose rimes which he already knows form the basis of the stories. This development from the known to the unknown accords with the best pedagogy. Children are extraordinarily enthusiastic about the Story Hour Readers. If Five simple steps form the entire development of each lesson--the telling of the story, the dramatization, the blackboard work, the work with the perception cards, and the reading from the books. Each step seems to the pupils like play, and leads naturally to the next. If In the conventional phonetic readers, the reading material is made to fit the phonetics and is often artificial and mechanical. In the Story Hour Readers the adaptation of the phonetics to the reading material keeps up the interest and the action, and makes the children's reading easy and natural. If The color pictures, which appear on almost every page of the books, are as lively and attractive as the method is efficient. May we tell you more about this successful new series?
