Excerpt: . . . 5 Using the logit function, and fitting a linear predictor composed of a p-dimensional vector of independent variables (X_1, X_2, \dots, X_p), leads to the 1 2 p familiar logistic regression model where the conditional probability of salmonid incidence is given as The independent variables used in the analyses consisted of spatial factors (latitude and longitude), month, time period, and sea surface temperature. Model parameters B_i of the linear predictor were estimated by the method of maximum likelihood. Model selection employed a stepwise regression algorithm. Design variables for categorical variables were constructed using reference cell coding, where the lowest group of a categorical variable serves as a referent group (Table 3). Model significance was assessed by likelihood ratio statistics which are formed from the logarithm of the ratio of two likelihoods (hereafter called the deviance). For a particular step, the deviance provides a test for whether the term entered (or removed) at that step significantly improves model prediction. Model adequacy was assessed by the Hosmer goodness-of-fit test (Hosmer and Lemeshow 1989), which compares the observed and predicted frequencies within strata defined by a grouping of the estimated probabilities. Results Only 57 of the 1,402 (i. e. , 4.07%) observed operations encountered salmonids, of resulting in a total observed catch 79 salmonids during the 1989 monitoring program. As a...
